Ufi/learndirect

- Ufi Ltd is the largest government backed, supported e-learning network in the world
- Offers “any time, any pace, any pace learning” to individual adults and businesses
- A key Ufi/learndirect objective is to win over new and excluded learners, many of whom are described as Skills for Life learners – they have low levels of literacy and/or numeracy, or English is not their first language

The challenges in developing a toolkit suitable for supporting all learners, including Skills for Life learners

- Accessibility for wide range of learners
- Cultural attitudes
- Many learndirect learners take short courses
- Many are new to recent formal learning
- Many have been alienated by education system in the past
- Balancing sophistication, complexity and ease of use
- Nothing similar has been done before!

The learndirect toolkit approach

- Action research
- Partnership approach work with Trade Unions, some industrial sectors, eg print
- Support from “EQUAL” funding as part of the project “Building Opportunities through Workplace Learning”, led by the TUC
- Consider the whole support model, in particular the role of the Union Learning rep and the tutor, staff development is important

What is in the learndirect toolkit?

Recently released into the Learner Support Environment (August 2003)

- The organiser
- The calendar
- Course notes
- My own learning
- Help and guidance

From Summer:2004

- Manage my evidence
- Evidence for qualifications

The learndirect toolkit, current and future developments

- Full scale field research into the use of the toolkit
- Incremental change controls, based on research and practice
- Development of new functions, including the learndirect transcript

The toolkit: - issues for reflection

- Should there be separate e-tools for different groups of adult learners, is there one size that fits all?
- An embedded approach or a separate box for e-Portfolio type functions
- Should we expect universal usage?
- Will all SfL learners be able to use these tools?
- An act of faith?
